THE FIELD OF EXPERIENCE IS LIKE A DYNAMIC FABRIC

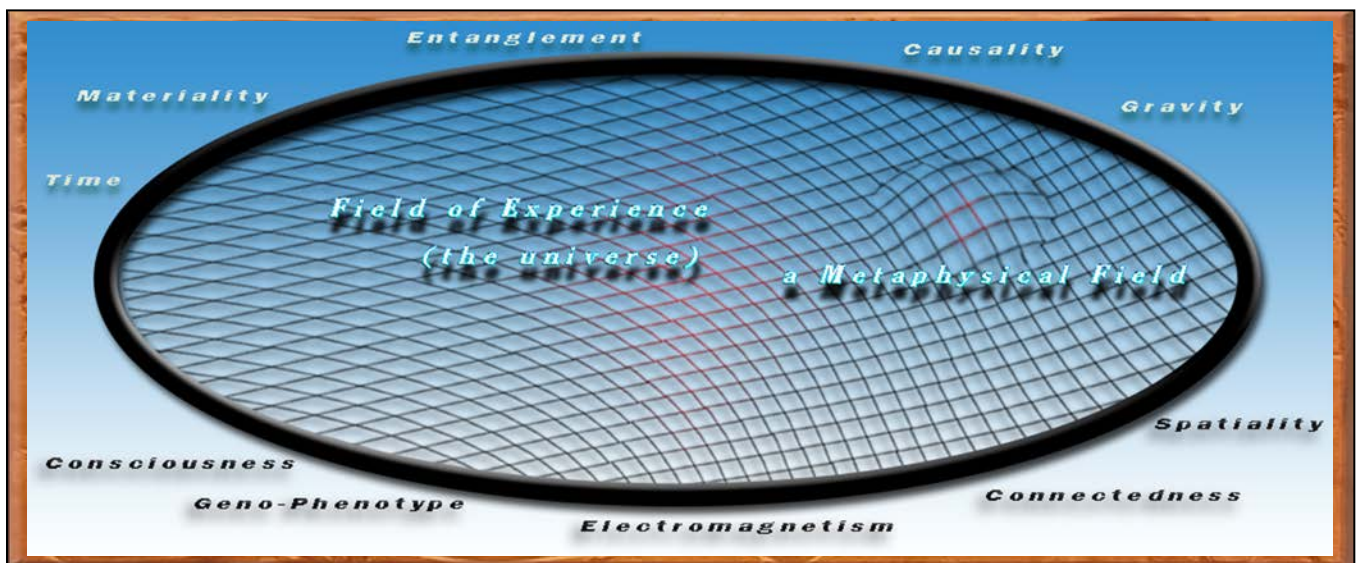

Humans live in a lived-in world, the universe. This is the sum total of everything that can be accessed by humans, and by access we would mean specifically interacting with. Everything in the universe is either material or is a force arising from material causes; thus, anything human may specifically interact with, we can influence by material means. We can destroy a ceramic bowl, or we can shut off the electricity by cutting a wire or destroying a power station or prevent two specific substances rubbing together to create static electricity: in any case, all forces we can specifically experience have material causes and we can effect these forces by material means. We live in a material universe.

The Laws of Physical Nature, however, do not exist within the universe, but rather structure the universe and can be said to be “of” the universe. These are not forces that humans may manipulate in any way: we cannot slow down time – although he may individually affect our cognition or sense of time, but this does not change intersubjectively experienced time. Neither can humans “cut” a piece of space and move it, leaving some bizarre un-imaginable “gap”. Time, causality, spatiality, materiality, consciousness, entanglement and the other Laws of Physical Nature can thus be said to not “exist”; we definitely need new words to allow easy communication of this idea.

Further, there are mysterious circumstances, happenings, and these are discoverable through mathematics, logic, huge numbers of computer iterations of formulas, and then discoverable as instantiated within the world. For example, the mysterious Fibonacci Series makes its presence known in many distinct and unrelated features of the world. The same can be said of the Lorenz Attractors/Repellers, Euler’s Number, Pi, and a host of these entities. I refer to these entities as metaphysical fields, as they are hidden from the world similar to the Laws of Physical Nature, and nevertheless have deep effect on the organization of the lived-in world.

We may draw some terminology from Martin Heidegger in his notion of the “clearing”, as that place that opens the lived space for humans, for indeed any sentient being. The Field of Experience is the structure of the Laws of Physical Nature and their interplay to create this clearing as a material place to be, and it is also the interplay of certain Laws of Physical Nature that give rise to these metaphysical fields, which may direct or effect action across the whole of experience, and otherwise attract or repel possibilities, much as risk and unintended consequences allow for freedom of action.

We may picture this Field of Experience as a dynamic weave of all these and within the center of this Field, within the center of this clearing, humans may find sufficient explanation, may live a successful and sustainable life, and may be mostly safe from bizarre and dangerous situations. However, the further we go from this center towards, say, absolute zero, the more dangerous things become. As we investigate more deeply the very atomically small, we both gain massive power and create large dangers. This connected Field of Experience is a structural feature of our universe, and sets a template for viewing matters as spread out in experience, not singular points disconnected, but a fabric-like topology that rends, that pulls and stretches as other events and experiences occur.

HISTORY AS EXPERIENTIAL TOPOLOGY

History provides knowledge, but not the certain and secure knowledge that we gain from the repeated, intersubjectively verifiable, measurable and falsifiable experiments of modern science. Thus we must temper any conclusion we may draw from knowledge of history different and more extensively than knowledge we draw from controlled rigorous experimentation. Thus, a singular piece of testimony is not epistemologically strong, that is, a singular piece of non-testable data does not give us a good basis to say “we know it”. However, time is long and experience if repeated often enough gives rise to knowledge that provides sustainability or provides reasonable grounds to accept as viable, or accept as a working premise, or accept as the basis for inclusion into larger explanatory frameworks.

We should not over-prioritize the testimony of any number of people or a repeated finding of a modern scientific experiment, but if the testimony of a large number of people is in opposition to unproven theory, then certainly the experience over time, has a higher standing. This is the case today, with the large number of similar type events of interference in human affairs by non-human sentient creatures spanning across a 6,000 year history.

If the metaphysical claim based on modern scientific experimentation is correct that a sentient being may indeed gain access to future information and thus be able to collapse a universal wave-function of that information, then we would expect to see that sentient being without our experience. And indeed, after looking, it appears clear that we do. The testimony spanning 6,000 years, including up to the current date, may be referred to as an Experiential Topology. The denial of any singular piece within the thousands of pieces of testimony, those today backed up with video and radar, requires more than an ad hoc denial or summary dismissal.

The attached list below does not seek to prove the metaphysics correct, that would be an impossible to even entertain, but it does lend support to human experience that such a metaphysics is consistent with recorded human events in the past, and in today, in an unbroken line of testimony by credible witnesses, and indeed some incredible witnesses and hoaxes, as well as perhaps some intentional misdirection.

If nothing else, the below abbreviated list indicates such a tremendous compilation that it is surprising that such instances of inexplicable events would remain so unknown by the general public and that more resources are not placed into uncovering the obvious mystery surrounding such repeated events.

Experiential Topology

The below list is not proof in the sense of a finding of a modern scientific experiment; and no such claim can or should be made. Also, there are countless personal sightings by groups of people, countless also of these with video. The bizarre sightings and indications of non-human sentient creatures interpenetrating human affairs spans 6,000 years, and is a sufficient experiential topology of similar experiences that it does arise to the level of sufficiently justified to not be spuriously ignored. In other words, as this long-lasting phenomenon conforms to the non-magical metaphysical explanation of a singular species collapsing an originary wave-function, and now we see in human history a pattern that indicates that such a sentient entity does in fact exist.

While it is certainly possible to give a "best explanation" for some of the below - indeed as I am not personally involved in each and every case, I cannot guarantee one or more are not hoaxes of some sort - the best explanation for all of the below taken as a whole indicate that some positive probability must be assigned to non-terrestrial involvement in human affairs going back to pre-history.

The below were selected from a much larger list. What is disturbing, however, is that consistent testimony by credible witnesses is often summarily dismissed rather than accepted and properly placed into metaphysical explanations. Thus the current purpose of the non-magical metaphysics and multi-consciousness ontology is an initial attempt to access the best explanation of all experiences to locate ourselves within existence.
